The Guy Medal in Gold is awarded triennially to those “who are judged to have merited a signal mark of distinction by reason of their innovative contributions to the theory or application of statistics”. It can be awarded both to fellows (members) of the Society and to non-fellows: Hill was the twelfth of 33 recipients to date. It is also awarded in silver and bronze. William Augustus Guy was President of the Royal Statistical Society from 1873-5 and the medal was commissioned by the Society to commemorate his death.

Sir Austin Bradford Hill, FRS (1897-1991), epidemiologist and statistician, whose pioneering work with Richard Doll was the first to demonstrate the connection between cigarette smoking and lung cancer, served as President of the Royal Statistical Society from 1952-53. Following his death the Society established the Bradford Hill medal in his memory. This, like the Guy medal, is awarded triennially to a fellow of the Society for outstanding or influential contributions to the development, application or exposition of medical statistics.

Harry Bates (1850–1899) was a central figure in the New Sculpture movement.
